You Generally Have the Right to Stay in the Nursing Home!

There are only 6 valid reasons that a nursing home can ask you to go to another facility, home, or to the home of a loved one:

1. Your health care needs truly cannot be met by the home;
2. Your health has improved enough that you no longer qualify for nursing home care;
3. You endanger the safety of other residents;
4. You pose a risk to the physical health of others;
5. You have failed to pay;
6. The facility is closing;

Even if the nursing home states one of these reasons, you have the right to appeal to challenge the discharge.

Important Steps You Should Know:

- The facility has to give you written notice (usually 30 days in advance) of the date, location and reason for the transfer or discharge.

- Where will I go? The nursing home cannot make you leave until you have a safe place to go where you will receive appropriate care. The nursing home staff must help you and your family find an appropriate place for you to move and must develop a plan of care to help you adjust to the new place.

- If you go to the hospital or on therapeutic leave, you have the right to go back to the first available bed in the same nursing home as long as you are Medicaid-eligible and you still need nursing home care—even if you did not pay to hold the bed.

If the nursing home tries to make you leave or refuses to let you return after a hospital stay, you should file an appeal with the Department of Medical Assistance Services.

- If you entered the nursing home for rehabilitation or therapy covered by Medicare and your Medicare coverage is now ending, the facility cannot force you to leave without notice and the opportunity for a hearing. If you are eligible for Medicaid, you should be able to move to a Medicaid certified bed as soon as one is available and you should be able to stay in the same nursing home.

- You have the right to appeal any of these decisions to:

The Department of Medical Assistance Services, Division of Client Appeals, 600 East Broad Street, Suite 1300, Richmond, VA 23219.

If you have any of these problems, call your local long term care ombudsman or your local legal aid immediately.
